EDITORIAL

The Oregon Plants, Oregon Places series, started by Editor Frank Lang in the second issue of Kalmiopsis (1992), has been a popular feature of our journal. Here, in our first theme issue of Kalmiopsis, botanists from each of the nine Bureau of Land Management districts in the state give us a sampling of the botanical diversity throughout Oregon. Four articles from eastern Oregon tell us about sagebrush steppe and Juniper bunchgrass habitats, including rare endemics on ash deposits (Leslie Gulch, Guano Creek/Sink Lakes), a natural playa system (Foster Flat), and an ungrazed plateau (The Island). In western Oregon, two articles unveil the mysteries of fens (White Rock Fen, Hunter Creek). Three areas protect serpentine-influenced habitats (Hunter Creek, French Flat, and Beatty Creek). Rock outcrops at Beatty Creek and Horse Rock Ridge support a variety of species adapted to drought where precipitation is plentiful. On behalf of NPSO, I thank the BLM botanists who, in addition to working to protect our botanical heritage on public land, wrote the articles: Joan Seevers, Jean Findley, Lucile Housley, Nora Taylor, Ron Halvorson, Barbara Raible, Nancy Brian, Mark Mousseaux, Susan Carter, and Doug Goldenberg. I hope to be fortunate enough to visit every one of these ACECs in the coming years.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS

Members of the Native Plant Society of Oregon and others are invited to submit articles, book reviews, artwork, and photographs for publication in Kalmiopsis. All materials submitted should pertain to Oregon's native vegetation and flora. Acceptance will be based on suitability (articles dealing with formal nomenclatural proposals or of a highly technical nature are not acceptable). Kalmiopsis publishes two series articles: Plant of the Year, and Oregon Plants, Oregon Places. Articles about botanical history in Oregon and other features related to native plants or plant communities in Oregon are also sought.

Please consider that the readers of Kalmiopsis are people with varied educational backgrounds and all articles must be comprehensible to a broad, but relatively well educated, audience. The goals of Kalmiopsis are to disseminate correct information about and generate interest in native plants, thus each article is reviewed by the editorial board and selected technical reviewers before publication.

Contributors of articles should submit one hard copy of a double-spaced manuscript accompanied by an electronic copy of the file (PC in Word, or a Text or Rich Text Format file; indicate the name of the program and version in the accompanying cover letter). Computer facilities are available for use at libraries and printing or word-processing businesses. Please do not submit text material without electronic copy.

Contributions without accompanying manuscripts, including artwork and photographs are welcome; color submissions must be suitable for publication in grayscale.

Send all submissions to the Kalmiopsis editor, or e-mail the Kalmiopsis editor to request an electronic submission. (Specific instructions for submission of photographs, figures, and tables will be sent to contributors upon request, or after the proposal for an article has been accepted.) More complete instructions are also available on the NPSO website.

Please feel free to contact the Kalmiopsis editor for further information, or to inquire if an article is suitable for publication in this journal.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This special theme issue of Kalmiopsis was supported financially by a grant from the US Department of Interior Bureau of Land Management.
